

Dave Allman is a partner at the global law firm K&L Gates and focuses his practice on export controls, economic sanctions, and national security law. Dave brings a wealth of experience in international trade matters, with a career spanning 25 years. Dave served 10 years in the Air Force spending extensive time in two combat zones relying upon then-cutting edge defense technology, and subsequently spent another 15 years managing and directing the lawful export of weaponized hardware to U.S. allies abroad. His extensive background includes serving as the Director of International Trade Compliance (ITC) and Legislative Affairs at a notable aerospace and defense company, where he led and oversaw the company's comprehensive ITC program. Dave also counsels large multinational corporations across the spectrum of cross-regulatory regimes. Notably, he played a pivotal role as the lead investigator for another large aerospace and defense company under a consent agreement, diligently probing potential violations of export controls.
